

Tiffin & Tea at Two E

In the British Raj, where the British custom of afternoon tea was supplanted by the local Indian practice of taking a light meal at that hour, it came to be called tiffin. It is derived from English colloquial or slang tiffing meaning to take a little drink, and had by 1867 become naturalized among Anglo-Indians in the north of British India to mean luncheon.

We look forward to sharing this beloved tradition with our Afternoon Tea Program by offering a selection of small bites with Indian & Raj flair, and homemade sweets that compliment spiced Chai tea
